It was not until after 6 o'clock that the lone vigil of the harbormaster yielded results. He was scanning the rocks at Dutch Gap when he sighted a low, rakish craft, which had just passed through the cut, steaming out into the middle of the channel. The sunlight fell full upon the dripping hows and glistened upon the barrel of the pivotaun, a five-pounder, on the forward deck. The harbormaster recognized the approaching craft as the Commodere Maury, flagship of the Virginia oyster.
